The dynamics in the agro-processing industry are dominated by large South African retailers. What have we learned from modelling European economic integration? One or more items could not be added because you are not logged in.

The predictive power of financial variables: new evidence from Australia and Pacific Islands. Its ability to compete more cost-effectively than other SACU partners in a variety of international markets is further enhanced by better access to agricultural inputs, better logistics infrastructure, more sophisticated logistics service providers, and more sophisticated local demand conditions. The aim is to enrich this framework and to propose that economic integration pathways are also dependent on the nature and factors of the competitiveness of industries. Maturity of the enabling environment: Indicators that define the readiness and maturity of the region for integration, in terms of comparative and competitive advantages, position relative to global trends, dependence, and performance in integration. This places such a region in a position to exploit comparative advantages and trade. Given the prevalence of "economic realism" thinking in the region, however, big regional players have sometimes been regarded as acting in their narrow national interest, rather than as catalyzing regional integration.
