By Robert A Wilson. Cloning and the Future of Human Embryo Research. Critical Evaluation In general, the book was mainly written on a basis of philosophical and moral perspectives when discussing different issues related to parental obligations such as adoption, abortion, gamete donation and surrogacy both which are used as an assisted reproductive technologies. In response to this problem, Prusak stated that, even if one cannot have direct obligations for a non-existent child, not to procreate is still an obligation for those who rationally believe that they would be incapable to fulfill their obligations toward the child when created.
