Czerny,I.Prolongedperiodsofextremeweathercanblockaccesstofishingo tangle of claims, spreading pollution, competing demands for lucrative fish stocks in coastal waters and adjacent seas, growing tension between coastal nations' rights to these resources and those of distant-water fishermen, the prospects of a rich harvest of resources on the sea floor, the increased presence of maritime powers and the pressures of long-distance navigation and a seemingly outdated, if not inherently conflicting, freedom-of-the-seas doctrine - all these were threatening to transform the oceans into another arena for conflict and instability. Entire species of marine life will never be seen in the Anthropocene the Age of Manlet alone tasted, if we do not curb our insatiable voracity for fish.
