The equation is flawed but it is a starting point that has potential. For a Catholic, these are Scripture and Tradition. According to Popper, totalitarianism was not unique to the 20th century.

Whether or not God exists, there is nothing outside the totality of existing things. The clergy that was not admitted into these esoteric circles, because they were thought not to be enlightened, soon banned apocryphal material heretical, which meant: forbidden to read for all. In the literary traditions of the Upanishads Brahma Sutras and the Bhagavad Gita conscience is the label given to attributes composing knowledge about good and evil, that a soul acquires from the completion of acts and consequent accretion of karma over many lifetimes. Its functionality is mainly rational.

Happiness is not a habitual disposition, if it were, it could be found in one's Oxford Companion to the Mind. Love is a feeling, not just an emotion, but still it is grounded in the physical world.
